FUTURE RESIDENTS

Designing through a lifetime, creating a fundamentally flexible structure for both millennials, singles or couples, families and older people. These are the inhabitants and their stories.

Susan, student health psychology and psychotherapy differentiation children and youth (almost finished), keeps a regular blog on budget baking and is part of the Digital Advisory Board of her former high school in Amsterdam, shares her home with her sister, 23 years old

'My mom was born in 1967. I remember both my parents busy and working while growing up. I graduated from an inner city high school that scorned household subjects 'sexist'. Then I left the nest to go and study. Though I could speak Spanish, recite all the German names and their exceptions and figure out the volume of a cone, I couldn't do laundry, change a tire, or sew on a button. I was educated, but fairly dumb. Since then I've taken it upon myself to learn the DIY skills I'd missed out on.'

Tom, artist & technician, calls himself an independent inventor, hates made-in-China merchandise, has a large self-reliance (i.e. does not want to be told what to do and what not to do), has been living in Noord all his life, 72 years old

'I grew up in the age of Tinker Toys and Meccano. Both were meant to inspire me to be a maker instead of a consumer. My first real tool was a wood-burning engraver that had such a short chord it was almost impossible to use. When I started using it, I burned myself more than once and nearly started a fire at the house. How in the world they sold this to kids in those days is now a mystery to me. I am what I make. My collection is displayed and for sale. But I do not create just for myself. My clients are my neighbours, and they often come back just for advice and bring coffee.'

Rinse aka 'Mister Applesirop', parttime professional trumpeter, surf instructor, bartender, mobile pop-up-print-shop owner, studied industrial product design, born in Lissersbroek, 33 years old

'I hate plastic stuff. Stuff in general, doesn't make me happy. I don't need much and only spend on ethical and sustainable brands. I love to help out others. Being sustainable and responsible is not about getting more, it's about getting smarter about what we have. A lot of people think that this is a trend and they're wrong. This is a generational shift based on values, and so, it's going to take a generation for it to shift again. Aesthetic trends come and go, but value-based trends, they have staying power.'

Dalir, English speaking dentist, husband and father of 3 boys, makes the best Thai curry and loves to boot his boat and take friends on spontaneous tours through Amsterdam, originally from Iran, 45 years old

'My wife and I have a pretty hectic but structured life. Most days are spent between house, school, daycare and work. But we've got many to share it with. That's how we make friends in this neighborhood: because we are, because of where we live and our daily activities, forced into regular contact with the same people. It is the natural soil out of which friendship grows. And we do everything by bike. That helps too.'
